Countering Corruption from the Bar, the Bench, and Beyond:
Senior United States District Judge Mark Wolf

12:10 - 1:10 p.m.
January 26, 2015
Jerome Greene Hall 102 A
Columbia Law School

Judge Wolf will discuss his path from prosecutor to federal judge to global anti-corruption adviser, including:

• His work on high-profile corruption matters, including the FBI's mishandling of informants in the case of notorious Boston mobster Whitey Bulger (at right).

• An innovative proposal to create an International Anti-Corruption Court.

Attendance is free and open to the public.
Non-pizza lunch will be served.

The Honorable Mark Wolf

Following a distinguished career at the U.S. Department of Justice, Judge Wolf was appointed to the U.S. District Court, District of Massachusetts, by President Ronald Reagan in 1985. Wolf served as Chief Judge of that court from 2006 to 2012. Currently a Senior Judge, Wolf teaches law and advises emerging democracies on anti-corruption reforms.
